1933 was not a good year. In the depths of the Great Depression, one out of every four adults was out of work. A series of vast dust storms devastated the heartland of the United States. In Germany, Adolf Hitler became Chancellor. (On the plus side, Prohibition was finally repealed.)

Against this dark background, the creators of the Pulitzer prize-winning musical Of Thee I Sing—George Gershwin, music; Ira Gershwin, lyrics; and George S. Kaufman and Morrie Ryskind, book—decided to write a sequel. The original show had satirized the American political system, telling the story of John P. Wintergreen, who runs for president of the United States—and wins—on a platform of Love, promising to marry the winner of a national beauty contest. Although it contained some biting and cynical satire, the show had maintained a lighthearted mood. Let 'Em Eat Cake, mirroring the year of its birth, would prove to be much darker and more problematic. Like its predecessor, it satirized politics and the Supreme Court. To this it added commentary on the army, Fascists, radicals, the League of Nations, businessmen, fashion, and even baseball.

Let 'Em Eat Cake featured many elements that were familiar to audiences from the earlier musical. It reprised “Wintergreen for President,” “Of Thee I Sing,” and the theme song of the Supreme Court. And many characters returned, reenacted by the same actors who had starred in Of Thee I Sing—President and Mrs. Wintergreen, the Supreme Court, and especially Alexander Throttlebottom, the hapless vice president whom no one ever recognized. During the run of Of Thee I Sing, Throttlebottom had become so beloved by the public that his name entered the language as a synonym for a harmless incompetent in public office.

Wintergreen and his confederates are voted out of office in favor of John P. Tweedledee. After the Supreme Court refuses to throw out the election results, the politicians open a shop selling blue shirts designed by Mary Wintergreen. When the business fails, they decide to start a revolution. The one thing they have a lot of is blue shirts, and Wintergreen explains, “You can’t have a revolution without shirts.” (In 1933, it was not yet clear how terribly unfunny the brownshirts of Germany and the blackshirts of Italy would prove to be.) With the help of the army (who has been bribed by being offered the war debt), Wintergreen seizes President Tweedledee and declares a dictatorship of the proletariat. He is in turn deposed by the radical rabble-rouser Kruger. Before the end of the evening, the audience will see the Supreme Court in chains, most of the main characters condemned to be executed, Throttlebottom with his head in the guillotine, and the military threatening to take control of the country.

Musically, the show was very ambitious. As he would in his next score, Porgy and Bess, George Gershwin was aiming at a creation which used the language of Broadway but the formal complexity and structure of an opera. Music and dialogue were integrated, and the music carried the action. He drew on wide-ranging influences including Handel, Schubert, Gilbert and Sullivan, military marches, Yiddish music, and the blues. The opening number was a reprise of “Wintergreen for President” from the earlier musical. This song already had incorporated “Tammany,” “The Sidewalks of New York” and “A Hot Time in the Old Town.” Tweedledee’s campaign song made use of “Dixie,” “The Battle Hymn of the Republic,” “Hail Columbia,” and “Over There,” as well. And these two complex songs were juxtaposed against each other in counterpoint.

Of Thee I Sing had already featured an unusual amount of counterpoint, but Let 'Em Eat Cake took this much further. Gershwin said, “I’ve written most of the music for this show contrapuntally, and it is that very insistence on the sharpness of a form that gives my music the acid touch it has—which paints the words of the lyrics, and is in keeping with the satire of the piece.” Explaining his reliance on counterpoint by turning to its greatest creator, he added, “I feel that Bach will still live when everyone later than Bach has been centuries forgotten—because there is the logic and the wit and the solidity of scientific form in everything he wrote.”

When the show opened out of town in Boston, it was one of the year’s hottest tickets: a pair of opening night tickets sold for the huge sum of $17.50. An estimated two hundred audience members came up from New York for the occasion. Reviews were warm. The Traveler called it “a brilliant successor to its famous predecessor,” and added “the smart audience ate every crumb with enthusiastic relish.”

It opened in New York on Oct 21, 1933. The New York reviews were more mixed. New York Times critic Brooks Atkinson praised it as, “a wild, taut, witty, pessimistic bludgeoning of knavish politics.” But he added, “After a hilarious first act it becomes merciless and mirthless, and considerably less amusing. . . It is not the hearty, guffawing burlesque that began the legend.” Beyond the dark subject matter, there were several complaints. There was no love interest. The second act was staged entirely in shades of blue—and while this elegantly reflected the plot, it was tedious to look at.

The main problem, however, was the sophistication of the music. Reviewers didn’t quite know what to make of it. “For all I know,” said the critic John Anderson, the music “may be great stuff, but you can’t wet a whistle with it, or take it out for dancing in the streets.” The Catholic World suggested that the musical would be more appropriately reviewed by a music critic rather than someone from the drama desk.

After ninety performances, Let 'Em Eat Cake closed, and it was never revived. Only one piece, the love song “Mine,” earned a place outside the show; it was recorded by Judy Garland and Bing Crosby. (This song derived from an exercise Gershwin had written when he was taking lessons in counterpoint.) For years much of the music and book were believed to be lost, although there were a few attempts at reconstruction, but in 1978 the composer’s handwritten notes were discovered in the Library of Congress. From this, the Broadway scholar John McGlinn reconstructed a detailed vocal score, which was then orchestrated by Russell Warner, drawing on the memories of people who had been involved in the original production.

Conductor Michael Tilson Thomas became an advocate of the work, which he conducted in a concert performance in 1987 at the Brooklyn Academy. “Let 'Em Eat Cake has operatic dimensions,” he said. “You can hear Porgy and Bess emerging from the musical textures. The score is so deep and rich that it is impossible to comprehend fully with just one hearing.”

Let ’Em Eat Cake, virtually unheard since 1933 has certainly not followed the same path as the triumphant Porgy and Bess. But George Gershwin was perhaps equally proud of it. Its music, he said, was his “claim to legitimacy.”

EDSEL ROMERO, Lieutenant

Edsel Romero is a New York City based actor. Originally from North Texas, he received his bachelor’s of music in music education (choral) from the University of North Texas. A classically trained baritone, Edsel joined MasterVoices in their 75th anniversary season and has had the privilege to perform at venues including Carnegie Hall, New York City Center, Alice Tully Hall, and the Rose Theatre at Jazz Lincoln Center.
MasterVoices (formerly The Collegiate Chorale) was founded in 1941 by legendary American choral conductor Robert Shaw and has been under the artistic direction of Tony Award-winner Ted Sperling since 2013. Known for its versatility, the group’s repertoire ranges from choral masterpieces and operas in concert to operettas and musical theater; it is also known for highly theatrical performances of rarely-heard works such as last season’s Lady in the Dark by Kurt Weill and Ira Gershwin, Victor Herbert’s Babes in Toyland, Scott Joplin’s Treemonisha, Tchaikovsky’s Maid of Orleans, and Rossini’s Moïse et Pharaon. The group regularly commissions and premieres new works; recent seasons included works by Ricky Ian Gordon and Randall Eng.

As the country’s first interracial and interfaith chorus, the group performed at the opening of the United Nations and has sung and recorded under the batons of esteemed conductors including Serge Koussevitzky, Arturo Toscanini, Leonard Bernstein, Zubin Mehta, Riccardo Muti, and Alan Gilbert. It has been engaged by top-tier orchestras, including the New York Philharmonic and the Israel Philharmonic, and has appeared at the Verbier and Salzburg Festivals.

Concerts regularly feature an inclusive roster of world-class soloists from across the musical spectrum, including Bryn Terfel, Stephanie Blythe, Deborah Voigt, Eric Owens, Nmon Ford, John Holiday, Kelli O’Hara, Paulo Szot, Bebe Neuwirth, and Victoria Clark, along with cross-disciplinary collaborations with such diverse creative minds as Vogue Editor-at-Large Hamish Bowles, Silk Road visual artist Kevork Mourad, and acclaimed choreographer Doug Varone. Roger Rees was the group’s Artistic Associate from 2003–2015.

THE ROGER REES FUND FOR MUSICAL THEATER

Nancy Dale Becker and Rick Elice, Co-Chairs

Roger Rees was MasterVoices’ beloved artistic associate from 2002–15. He championed the rare and the witty, the elegant and the inventive, and above all, the theatrical. This Fund (established in April 2017) will ensure our musical theater programming keeps reaching for the stars—where, we hope, it will find him. Support this initiative today at mastervoices.org/ReesFund or by calling 646.202.9623.
